Traffic Fact Sheet 7 – Serious traffic offences and courts

1 Penalty notice offences

Most types of traffic offences can be dealt with by a penalty notice (an on-the-spot fine). The police can choose whether to give you a penalty notice or send you to court.

If you receive a penalty notice, you may choose to have it dealt with by a court if you think you are not guilty or the amount of the fine is too high. Think carefully, and get legal advice if possible, before you decide to do this. If it was a camera-detected offence and you were not driving, you will need to nominate the driver. For more information about these processes, see Traffic Fact Sheet 6 – Speeding.

2 Traffic offences dealt with by courts

Some traffic offences cannot be dealt with by penalty notice, and are always dealt with by a court. These include:

- driving while disqualified, cancelled, suspended, or refused;
- driving when you have never had a licence (or you have not held a licence in the last 5 years);
- driving at a speed, or in a manner, dangerous to the public;
- more serious or repeat drink-driving or drug-driving offences;
- dangerous or negligent driving causing death or grievous bodily harm;
- failing to stop and give assistance in an accident involving death or injury to another person; and
- police pursuit ('Skye's law') offences.

3 Which court will I go to?

Most traffic offences are dealt with by the Local Court.

Even if you were under 18 at the time, you will usually go to the Local Court if old enough to have a licence (this means 16 for a car, or 16 and 9 months for a motorbike).

The Children's Court will deal with a traffic offence if you are too young to have a licence or if you are going to the Children's Court for a related criminal offence (e.g. driving a stolen car).

Very serious offences such as manslaughter or dangerous driving causing death or grievous bodily harm will usually end up in the District Court.

4 What are the penalties?

Penalties for traffic offences are tough and may include heavy fines, imprisonment, and disqualification from driving. Even tougher penalties are imposed for second or subsequent offences.

Immediate roadside licence suspension may also apply for some drink-driving and speeding offences, offences that cause serious injury or death, or being an unaccompanied learner (see Traffic Fact Sheet 4 – Licence suspension and appeals).

5 Will I be disqualified from driving?

Many traffic offences carry an automatic disqualification. This means that a person who is convicted of one of these offences will be disqualified from having a licence for the automatic period set out by the law unless the court decides to make a different order.

Instead of imposing the automatic disqualification, the court may:

- Reduce the disqualification to the minimum period set out by the law; or
- Increase the disqualification period (there is no upper limit on the disqualification period. However, the court must specify a period; it can't simply disqualify a person for life).
- In special cases, the court may decide not to convict the offender at all, but to deal with the matter under section 10 of the Crimes (Sentencing Procedure) Act (or a similar law for children). The court can either dismiss the charge or give you a good behaviour bond. As long as you don't breach the bond, there will be no conviction and no disqualification.

6 Penalties and disqualifications for common traffic offences

For offences involving driving without a licence see Traffic Fact Sheet 3 – Unlicensed driving. For offences involving alcohol or drugs see Traffic Fact Sheet 8 – Drugs, alcohol and driving.

7 What is a habitual traffic offender declaration?

Until 28 October 2017, you could be declared a 'habitual traffic offender' if you committed 3 serious traffic offences within a 5-year period. This meant you could be disqualified for an extra 5 years.

From 28 October 2017, you can no longer be declared a habitual traffic offender.

For more information, see Traffic Fact Sheet 14 - Important changes to licence disqualification laws in 2017 (and how to get disqualifications lifted).

8 Can I get my disqualifications lifted early?

If you have been disqualified for a long time, you may be able to get your disqualifications lifted early after a period of good behaviour.

For more information, see Traffic Fact Sheet 14 - Important changes to licence disqualification laws in 2017 (and how to get disqualifications lifted).
